Peoples of the World-Australian and New Zealand Life and Culture

Humanities Distribution: 5 Credits

Offers students an introduction to Australian and New Zealand society and culture by examining its major social and political institutions, the cultural values of its people, and the significant contemporary issues these nations confront. Students will engage in critical discussions about the differences between American and Australian/New Zealand cultures, and will address the relation of Australia and New Zealand to the Pacific Rim. This course aims to facilitate student orientation to Australia and New Zealand, and offers an important socio-cultural framework for other courses they will take. Satisfies Humanities distribution requirement for AA and AS degrees.

History-History of Australia and New Zealand

Social Science Distribution: 5 credits

Examines the history of the Australasian nations of Australia and New Zealand from the first human inhabitation of Australia some 60,000 years ago, and the Maori settlement of New Zealand some 800 years ago, through the long and often difficult processes to become the modern island nations of Australia and New Zealand. Attention is given to the various groups who have migrated to Australasia, the European exploration and colonization of the area, the development of settlements and colonial governments, the move to nationhood in the late 19th century, and the emergence of the modern nations of Australia and New Zealand in the 20th century. Satisfies Social Science distribution requirement for AA and AS degrees.

Biology-Natural Science of Australia and New Zealand

Science Distribution: 5 credits

Focuses on the ecology of Australia and New Zealand, including ecosystems and human impact on ecosystems. The biodiversity, characteristics, and interactions of Australian and New Zealand flora and fauna will be investigated within various habitats and ecosystems. A significant portion of the course will involve field observations and experiences. This course does not meet the lab distribution requirement and is designed for the beginning college student. Satisfies non-lab Science distribution requirements for AA and AS degrees.
