Landen

- student athlete of two years
- learned both the ups and downs of what it's like as you progress as an athlete. Your schoolwork becomes just as important, it teaches you to balance between keeping your body healthy, but also keeping your mind ready, focused, and sharp.
- sprained ankle-but while recovering, I've learned that they are always there to support you no matter the conundrum
- One of the biggest things I ended up learning was communication. Communication was and still is the biggest key to my success from talking to my coach about recovering to talking to staff and teachers on understanding a topic.
- Sometimes life gets more complicated and you feel like you're juggling so much by yourself, but that isn't always the case. Your coaches, athletic department and other staff are always there to help you out and be the best version of yourself.
- first year of track, which was unofficial, my left ankle inflamed and had to back off for a while, but Coach Leahy never backed out and continued to help me find ways to recover until eventually I was able to run at faster pace again.
- I am sporadic when it comes to balancing both training and school-work but I know for a fact that when you put in your best efforts along with communication you will come out on top no matter what

Tanzy

- Accomplishments--Third team all conference, Deans list quarterly
- Belonging--I am shy in new places and was scared I wouldn't make friends at college but I have made lifelong friends through volleyball, I live on campus with volleyball players, which helped us motivate each other to do well in class and pick each other up when we feel burnt out, met players of other sports we are now good friends with
- I am an aviation major and was worried about school/life balance--but we had team study halls, and athlete study halls that made it doable and had academic success and am happy with my career pathway
- Skill development--Leadership/Team captain, Planning team bonding, Listening and collaborating with others, Confidence in decisions, Communication
- Time management--During practicing and In life w/ school and volleyball
- Networking--Coaching at a local club (who knows me because of GRC) and Help head coach recruit for future years during club

Hi Kara,

You're correct. You can direct your colleagues to this Q&A document
: <https://www.sbctc.edu/resources/documents/colleges-staff/programs-services/workforce-education/pfr-qanda-061022.pdf>

Here is the relevant section:

Q2: Can any of these funds (cybersecurity FTES, nursing FTES, and nursing sim lab equipment) be used on capital projects, like room renovation?

A2: UPDATED 6/7/22 Yes. If this application includes any facility improvement work, it should be procured using a public work process administered by the Engineering & Architectural Services division of the Department of Enterprise Services (DES), unless it is eligible for self-performance by college staff. DES will charge a project management fee for administering the public work portion of the project. Colleges can self-perform work with qualified staff if the total cost of the work is less than $45,000 and only requires one trade, or up to $90,000 for work requiring multiple trades. (RCW 28B.50.330). The college must submit a Local Capital Expenditure Request to the SBCTC Capital department for expenditure tracking of the facility modifications. Colleges may not create any new building footprint or permanent structures using these funds.

Report to the Board of Trustees of College District No. 10

Report Title: Faculty Report

Department: Instruction

Prepared By: David Norberg

Date of Board Meeting: 01/15/26

I am submitting this report in writing and will not be presenting this in person at the January 15th meeting. At the November meeting, Trustee Navas commented on the length of meetings, and perhaps this is a point where we have some agreement. I am increasingly of the mind that Board meetings are a waste of precious time and energy. Here are a few suggestions for making them more productive.

Most importantly, we need the College and the Board to spend less time talking and more time taking action to remedy the numerous operational problems that plague the College. Two examples come immediately to mind.

The first issue concerns safety. I commented on faculty concerns about safety in September. The Board suggested holding a safety summit. In October, one of the student leaders asked what the College had done in the previous month to address the problems we raised in September. The President gave a long response but could have answered in a single word: nothing. From a faculty point of view, there has only been a little bit of conversation and absolutely nothing has been accomplished. It is now January, and nothing has been done. We have heard that a safety summit will happen some time later this year, but this just isn't acceptable. "Summit" is simply a grandiose term for a meeting, and we've been asking the College to address safety concerns for more than two years. Apparently, planning to organize a meeting at some unspecified time in the future is the best the College can do in two years. That's not good enough, and we have no confidence that the "summit" will lead to actual work. Past performance by this administration is a good indicator of future performance. We expect to hear a lot of talk that will promptly go nowhere. Action, any action at all, would be far better than another meeting.

The second issue is the climate survey. Last June, the Board promised to conduct a climate survey, but that has yet to happen. Again, we've heard that it will happen sometime this year, but there has been no visible movement. It's been six months, and running a climate survey is not that hard. If the Board had been serious, the climate survey would be well underway by now if not completed. There has been sufficient time. Yes, governments often move slowly, but I have worked for large corporations and other government agencies that moved much faster. We can do better. At this pace, we may not get survey results this year and will have no time to act on findings. Perhaps that was the desired outcome – bury the problems once again.

A few other ideas for improving Board meetings immediately come to mind:

- Stop celebrating success at every meeting. We have many problems, and those 15-30 minutes could be spent on far more important matters. Celebrate success next time it is truly warranted. In general, the College that is put on display in Board meetings is a Potemkin village. Spend more time looking behind the façade.
- Put your phones away. Far too often we've seen trustees looking at their phones during public comments and reports. It is extremely disrespectful.
- Attend in person. As a faculty leader, I find that hybrid meetings are extremely inefficient. Every topic takes longer in that format, and we have increasingly moved to mostly in-person or all online meetings. It makes sense to keep a Zoom option to allow the public to listen in on Board meetings, but trustees should be there in person. It will save time and be more effective.
- Restore the public comment period to two minutes per person. Shortening it without notice can only be interpreted as an effort to stifle dissent.

I continue to hope that this Board will eventually remember that it has a duty to our community and to the people of Washington State to be the oversight body for the College. It is your job to hold our administrators accountable for their work, and the horrific $14 million budget deficit stems from a lack of oversight. Stop cheerleading for and defending the administration. Since this Board has drifted from that duty, we will be spending more of our time working with SBCTC, the State government, the Northwest Commission, the media, and other external agencies to bring the oversight that this College so desperately needs.

In November, I commented that I would be happy to talk with any of you individually. None of you responded. I am making that offer again. You go to conferences with the President, you talk with her one-on-one, and you hear her side of the story on a regular basis. If you take your roles seriously and truly care about the College, then spend some time talking to faculty and staff leaders one-on-one to hear a different perspective. You might not agree with us but take the time to understand our well-founded concerns. I am readily available and can easily be reached at dnorberg@greenriver.edu or norbergdj@gmail.com.
