Writer Frank Herbert noted that "beginnings are very fragile" because what happens early on deeply affects what occurs later. This is certainly true of individuals as well as cities. Did you know Auburn was first called Slaughter? Kent was first called White River then Titusville and is now the 2nd largest city in King County? Are you aware of the logjam wars between Auburn and Puyallup over the route of the White River? Do you know how Enumclaw got its name and what part the railroad played in its founding? Find the answers to these questions and many more you are not aware of. Understanding these cities beginnings help us understand the geopolitical effects of location on our behaviors and attitudes.
